

LET HAPPINESS SMILE ON YOU

In freedom, however, there is uncertainty, fear arises. The willingness to consciously remain uncertain is called courage. The brave is not the one who is not afraid of the other, but the one who, despite his fears, continues the marked path, in a way the path into the unknown. The willingness to be uncertain is confidence. We must learn to pay attention, that is, to live truly every moment.

GO GET THE CALENDAR AND SET THE DATE. Two women helped me the most. Their trick was simple: they talked about my decisive step exclusively with the word

"when", not "if". Nothing about it was spontaneous. We spent almost a year planning and decided on the place and date of departure. Deciding when the time is right to make a decisive move becomes crystal clear.

TRY IT, EVEN IF IT'S JUST ONE THING. Take the decisive step, get your idea out into the world, and you'll see what happens. Some things are instant hits, others aren't, but that doesn't mean that an idea won't have its time and come back in some way later. You just can't know. But if you don't take the decisive step and get these things out into the world, then you don't stand a chance. And so I bought a domain for ten bucks, named it "dot guy" and told all my friends and family about it. In the office at the time, the carpenters from the local furniture workshop happened to be installing new cabinets for us, and I quietly walked up to the worker and said: "Do you have any work?". I didn't know what was going to happen or what was going to follow those events, I just wanted to get people together to dance. Suddenly an idea popped into my head: the fronts of cars look like faces in a way, and it would be really fun if those faces had mustaches. I scoured the internet but couldn't find the cotton wool mustache anywhere. I said to myself, let's get one of those mustaches together and attach them to the car and see what happens.

GET READY TO BE LUCKY. I don't think people are unlucky or lucky. Happiness is available to everyone, you just have to take the decisive step to experience it. When you take a decisive step towards something that is important to you, you will surprise yourself and you will come across the next thing that you would not have seen otherwise. Once you know what you want, once you start planning, you're just a hair's breadth away from a happy accident. Luck may not smile on you until you actually take the decisive step, but... Then happy coincidences start to appear. All you have to do is be in the right frame of mind, to be open to what is given to you. Sometimes you make a decisive move that doesn't work out, and then later things fall into place and people say, "Man, how did you get so lucky?". But I firmly believe that you create your own happiness and that you have to put yourself in a position for happiness to smile at you.

AND THEN YOU TAKE A DECISIVE STEP. If we tried to plan a little more and more, we'd still be stuck in the harbor like everyone else. You don't need to write an all-encompassing business plan before taking your decisive step. Preparing for a life change can turn into one of the world's most seductive procrastination tools. Travel and adventure are a definite subject for cocktail chats, and there's a good chance that such conversations will never end. Most important of all, if you want a chance, you have to take a decisive step. No one, not even your supporters, not even the person you value most, can make the right decision and tell you when is the right time to take a decisive step. Then take the bull by the horns and take the decisive step, because no one else will do it for you. I casually mentioned the idea to my mother that maybe it would turn out quite well if I decide to take a decisive step after the summer season...she said that if I want to go, I should go! It's good to plan, but what happens quickly is that you get stuck in the gray zone between planning and actually taking a step. Get your beliefs in order, learn as much as you can, sharpen your skills, then go.

BE WHO YOU ARE! The hardest thing of all is to give a damn about what other people think. People saw me behind the cash register or in the kitchen and questioned my education and ambitions. Such is life. You grit your teeth and move on and learn that people do. After all, things like this give you a thick skin, and you need that in a specific step. When I told my co-workers that I was going to quit, they thought I was crazy. they were very kind and they cared. They took me into a room and said, "Are you sure you want to do this?" and I thought to myself, "None of them are qualified to tell me what to do with my life." Finally, I took the decisive step because I wanted to be me. People ask me, "How do you do something like that?"

anyone can do it. Whatever your decisive step is, if you go into it with passion and force, no one will stop you.

THAT WASN'T TOO RISKY, WAS IT??? Looking back, it seems like it was a terrible risk to leave a job where I was making loads of money for an uncertain future as a writer. but I knew I really wanted to do this. There wasn't even an iota of doubt and I was increasingly reluctant to go there to work every morning. That's why the decision wasn't that difficult at all, and I didn't feel it was a big risk for a kid. I've always been terribly afraid of failure because we've been taught to be perfect from a young age. It's very easy to only look at the negative consequences when faced with so many changes...but try to also think about the positive consequences of taking a decisive step: all the experiences and the sense of fulfillment we gain. We are used to scaring ourselves and distracting ourselves from the decisive step with exaggerated stories, so you should not let this happen to you.
