

LISTEN TO YOUR INNER VOICE

When we are faced with decisions about change, no one can guarantee us what the decision will bring us. In fact, this is precisely the charm, but we want security, even if it is false. We seek belonging, faith, but really we just need awareness. We can only respond to uncertainty by strengthening awareness.

GET IN TUNE WITH YOURSELF! Looking back, even then I knew what my priorities were, but I tried not to pay attention to them. It's a little uncomfortable when a hidden inner voice talks to you that you don't dare to listen to. It's even more annoying when that voice just won't quit. The truth about what you really need to do is somewhere in your belly. Listen to her and proceed with caution. If there is a small voice inside you that is telling you something, the best thing to do is not to push it away, but to just sit with it and listen to what it is telling you. Where does he come from? Why is it here and what does it mean? Time to turn up the volume on that inner voice and turn down the volume on everything else.

YOU ARE NEVER ALONE. In fact, you never take the decisive step alone. Each of us faces moments of decision in life: to take a decisive step or not???? To keep the decisive step alive, it helps if you tell someone about it. The director of the program asked me "What plans do you have for your career?" and I answered him truthfully "Well, I have some idea about football." Instead of answering me in the style of some people "Well that's a hair-raising thing" he replied "Great. Let's make it happen." This was the first step in bringing my voice out of my silence into the light.

THERE WILL COME A TIME WHEN YOU WILL KNOW. I knew then that I had made a real difference in that person's life and it was a turning point. I started at a low point, when I was almost completely broke, without a job for a year, and then I got a restart in one of the strangest ways: when I almost went back to my former job, I was reminded very clearly why I made the decision step. If your body is telling you something, it's not lying. If you feel that you would like to do something else or be somewhere else, and this feeling persists in you and does not go away, listen to it. That hushed inner whisper grew louder and finally became deafening. It was essential that he would regret it if he did not take the decisive step. I knew I couldn't live with that regret. A real adventure - wrong moment - but an adventure it was.

ACCEPT THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CRAZY AND STUPID. If you leave an idea as a vague dream, it's hard to make it happen, but if you start putting the pieces together and think carefully about what it means going forward, it's much easier to get excited about it because it's no longer just a crazy dream, it's no longer something silly . There were a few things that absolutely had to be arranged so that the decision to take this step was not completely illogical. Choosing the right moment is crucial. If you have a family to support or are in debt, now is almost certainly not a good time to quit your money-making job and chase your unprofitable dream. But this does not mean that you will never be able to follow your dreams. It just means that the moment is not yet right. There is a danger of taking the decisive step too late or not taking it at all. People are apparently very aware of the risk associated with taking the step, but less aware of the risk of not taking the step. The risk of being unhappy is a risk.

THINK IN TERMS OF 'SUPPORT' RATHER THAN 'PERMISSION'. A big obstacle in taking the decisive step is the belief that you have to ask for permission. I want their support, but I don't need permission. Each time, people I truly trusted convinced me I was making a mistake. They could be right every time, but my heart told me otherwise. I wanted to take the decisive step and never looked back. Telling everyone in the office was difficult. They were confused that the work they were doing was not what I wanted. The hardest part was telling the high school coach. He and his wife were like family to me. The coach helped me grow into a mature person. He understood me, supported me in this and continues to do so, but it was difficult. It was important to seek the opinions and perspectives of others, but that meeting with the counselor taught me that no one can judge better than me what decisions are best for me.

WORDS TO TAKE A DECISIVE STEP. The question I keep coming back to in my life is: what would I do if I wasn't afraid??? Everyone can take a decisive step. Sometimes these life experiences prepare you for this just as well as a book or an excellent education. It's okay to believe in something bigger and follow your desires. It seemed to me that it was a greater success to burn out, if I had to, at something that I was meant to do, than to succeed at something that others wanted me to do. This is what I want from my legacy – a wave that will continue over time!!!
